Details by Wireless.

Details of the collision at sea in the dense fog came fifully by wireless to-day from many receiving stations along the New England coast line. The story told in brief but potent messages, how the passengers of the Republic and the Florida spent many anxious and uncomfortable hours following the wreck. Not until all were safe and sound on the Baitic did they have a feeling of security.

feeling of security.

After the transfer of the passengers After the transfer of the passengers from the Republic to the Fiorida, which had no accommodations for the 400 and more additions to her already heavy list, Captain Voitolin, of the Italian ship, gave orders to stand by until further help arrived. An examination of the Fiorida showed that her cut-water and bow had been crumpled as if she had crashed into a stone wall, and her two forward compartments were filled with water. However, she showed no signs of sinking. But it was deemed best at a late hour, to transfer not only the Republic's passengers, but all those on board the Fiorida as well, to the Baltic, as Captain Voltolin believed his passage to Voltolin believed his passage to York would be slow, and there insufficient accommodations and supplies for so many passengers.

All night long the transfer of passengers was in progress. There was sengers was in progress. There was little alarm among the passengers. Early to-day the transfer was completed. As the morning advanced the fog lifted, and the disabled steamship was picked up. La Lorraine to Rescue.

The French liner La Lorraine, the first of the many ships that partielpated in this stirring sea incident, are rived in port to-day. She was 120 miles from the scene of the accident when her officers were informed of the Republic's plight by the Marconi operator at Siasconsett, Mass. "C. Q. D.," the ominous letters of the international sea code, indicating distress, had roused the sleepy operator in his room on the French steamer, and a few minutes later came the words "Republic wrecked; wants assistance," followed by the latitude and longitude of the ship in distress.

by the latitude and longitude of the ship in distress.

"Tell them I am coming," responded Captain Edouard Tournier, and for the next six hours he sent his ship tearing through the fog at the dangerous speed of twenty knots, which brought her to the scene shortly after the hour of 'noon. Then and until nightfall, La Lorraine steamed slowly about in the mist, searching for the waterlogged Republic, whose ship bell could be lieard, so near was the French steamer to the object of her quest. At this time La Lorraine was in close wireless touch with the Baltic, also hastening to the aid of her sister ship. Finally, as night was failing, the Baltic flashed a message which told those on La Lorraine that the endangered passengers of the stricken ship were safe aboard the Italian liner Florida. Captain Tournier, who plainly showed signs of the strain and his long vigil, to-day in simple language told the story of the search. By his side stood Be Bour, the wireless man, who less than his captain had been under terrific strain.

Towards 1 in the afternoon, we reached the vicinity of the wreck, as known to us by the bearings given us by the operator at Siasconsett, but the fog was so dense that nothing could be seen. Meanwhile we had come very close to the Baltic which we never actually saw, so thick was the fog. I was constantly exchanging messages with her, and I could hear not only her bell, but also another bell, which took to be the Republic's of silled thing plainly as Henry Brady, which I took to be the Republic's of silled thing plainly as Henry Brady, which I took to be the Republic's of silled thing plainly as Henry Brady, which it fook to be the Republic's of illed twiskey selling against him is said to have resulted from the effects of the woodsworth as an an one of the was returning from a negro festival, where he had gone to preserve the pass the was rime to Die.

The final message, which released La Lorraline from her fraitless search and sent her into port, came from the Baltic at 6:40 P. M. It read:
"Republic says to steer for the Florida. She is proceeding to New York with passengers, and she must have some one to stand by. She is blowing four blasts."

An hour later another wireless message was received stating that the revenue cutter Gresham, with the Republic's crew on board, was proceeding to Gayhead.
